Tight budgets have taken a toll on worthwhile school programs. Mission Viejo High School students took on that challenge by raising money for their Model United Nations program with the help of RightResponse.

Students in the program hoped to attend a national conference in San Francisco where they could learn about diplomacy and international affairs. But the school could not pay for travel and lodging costs.

Enter RightResponse. Students grabbed Quick Sell Backpacks and asked the community to support their efforts. And the community responded by purchasing more than $20,000 in first aid kits.

In all, the fundraiser brought in $10,000, allowing Mission Viejo students to join others from across the country at the Regional High School Model United Nations Conference in San Francisco.

RightResponse gained a vote of confidence from students and school officials alike. In fact, the club earned more money by referring another local school to RightResponse.

“Parents and schools are just tapped out for funds. Thanks to RightResponse, we were able to earn the money needed for our students.”
